Grant Sigmon represented a Greensboro woman in a custody dispute involving the relocation of a minor child. The father adamantly opposed the relocation, and litigation ensued. With the custody matter set for hearing in the Fall of 2014, the case settled just days before the case was called for trial. Sigmon's client was allowed to relocate and now has primary physical custody of the minor child.

Grant Sigmon was hired to represent a local Father when his child's Mother took the child to Texas without Father's knowledge or permission. Sigmon litigated the case for over a year, engaged local counsel in Texas, participated in multiple interstate hearings between the Courts in North Carolina and Texas under the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction and Enforcement Act, and ultimately settled the case. After not seeing his Father and other family members in almost three years, the child was returned to Greensboro, NC for Thanksgiving 2015.

Grant Sigmon represented a Greensboro woman in a child support dispute in Guilford County District Court. The Court Order for child support was entered more than a decade ago, but the Father recently stopped paying a portion of his monthly obligation. Within weeks of Sigmon's involvement, the client walked out of the courtroom with a check for $20,000, marking the arrears paid in full.
